USING SUBSTITUTES.

Because there are those who hav gotten the impression that the coal shortage is not as acute as represent ed, because much relief has been obtained through the mild weather of the past month, because there are many who have been too willing to fix the blame for the shortage rather than make the most of the opportunities to protect themselves through the use of substitutes and because there is that tendency to believe that everything will come out all right there is a sudtien awakening in New York to the fact that there isn't coal enough.

That means of course that there im't anthracite enough of the particular size with which they are familiar, and that they have been permitting the appeals that have been made to avail themselves of the great quantities of substitutes to go unheeded. A little cold weather causes a scurrying to get fuel. It isn't to be had and still substitutes are scorned to the extent that bargeloads of them are causing congestion because of the unwillingness to resort to that form of fuel. New York isn't the only big city that is similarly troubled. Boston is distribtrting at cost 6,000 tons of semi-an thracite coal in lots of one and two tons and is getting such a big response that the force of cierks handling the orders had to be increased.

In New York the allotment of hard coal is two million tens short of seat That means that a quantity of small anthracite, or bituminous coal must be used and the quicker this is realized the quicker will the consumer become accustomed to its use and prevent

What is tree in New York is true elsewhere on a smaller scale. Economy may well play its part but the utilizaof other forms of fuel than have formerly been burned will relieve the situation. The time is long past for the proper realization of the real situation

000 men and 12,000 officers there was great emphasis placed upon the desirability of peace and of showing other countries a good example in the matter of demobilization. Likewise there was also need of cutting the heavy expenses of the nation, and the cost of maintaining a large army was naturally one of the items to get attention. When the Christmas seals. army appropriation was cut reductions had to be made. Secretary Weeks is now desirous of overcoming some of the weakness that if it wasn't for the moths, was caused by those reductions, and believes that the wisdom of increasing the officers, whose training is the most important in the maintenance and perfaction of organization, is asparent. When it comes to the matter of proper protection expense should not be considered, but it seems highly probable that this matter will not be overlooked at the present time,
